

The Threat

Planning to meet the threat:

At VTS, our experiences taught us that the only way to prevent a catastrophe is to actively prepare for it. Plan to prepare. Prepare to prevent. You cannot write a policy, put it on a shelf to gather dust and expect it to protect you. Successful preventive measures are dynamic. They are competently rendered, and they must continually be evaluated and updated. The nature of today's threat is fluid and your plan should evolve to encompass the breadth and scope of the threat. You won't get a checklist from us. We will help you plan. We will help you evolve.

Take a good look at your organization from a different perspective, from the perspective of the threat: the terrorist, the would-be mass murderer, the individual or entity that exists to inflict catastrophe. Are your people safe? Are your facilities secured?

Any police officer will tell you, if a criminal is sizing you up and you look like a victim, you are likely to become one. Prevention starts with posture.

Are you postured like a victim? Are you a soft target?

Soft targeting and maximizing catastrophe:

We believe in planning for the worst-case scenario, because that is the attacker's goal. Spectacular attacks are their desired outcome.

Terrorists (foreign and domestic), supremacy groups, eco-terrorists, disgruntled employees and desperate criminals: recent history demonstrates that small groups of motivated individuals with imaginative plans can wreak havoc upon the unprepared.

- Superpheonix Nuclear Power Station, France (1982): 5 Russian-made rockets fired at a nuclear reactor, narrowly missing the reactor core
- Oklahoma City (1995), 1 attacker, 168 killed, 850 wounded
- Olympic Games, Atlanta (1996): 1 attacker, 2 killed, 111 wounded
- North Hollywood shootout (1997), 2 gunmen against 370 LAPD officers, 12 officers and 8 civilians wounded
- Columbine (1999), 2 attackers, 12 killed and 24 wounded; most of them children
- September 11, 2001: 19 attackers, thousands dead
- Moscow theatre hostage crisis (2002): 42 attackers, 900 hostages, 129 killed
- Beslan School (2004): 32 attackers, 1200 hostages, hundreds killed; most of them children
- Earth Liberation Front, to date, over 1200 attacks against property in excess of $200 million in damages

Conventional wisdom states that it cannot get much worse:

At VTS, we regard today's conventional wisdom as complacency, courting disaster.

Much like generals in the military who prepare to fight the last war, many experienced law enforcement and community leaders are preparing to defend against the last attack. More money, bigger guns and more technology will not sufficiently counter the threat.

The problem is that the next series of attackers have seen the results, learned the lessons of the last attack and they have incorporated those lessons into their strategy. When these attacks succeed, it is because they are a surprise. Their greatest weapon is their imagination, where lack of imagination is one of the greatest weaknesses in the efforts to stop them.

Can you remember the last time you heard of one of these attacks foiled? It's rare, but it happens. It happens because the threat is recognized, imagination is used and competent action is taken.

At VTS, we anticipate and plan for these situations through our thorough war-gaming process. We identify new methods of attack from the attacker's perspective, to uncover weaknesses and reduce vulnerabilities.

Imagination followed by competent action is a Victory Tactical Solution.

What are you planning for?

Imagine a terrorist organization inspired by, and looking to replicate the 1984 Union Carbide plant disaster in Bophal, India, where over 15,000 died and hundreds of thousands were injured. Have you planned for a catastrophic event like this?

Instead of bank robbers, imagine a scenario like the 1997 North Hollywood shootout with a radicalized group of students on your local college campus. Can your department respond to this?

Imagine Beslan in your neighborhood, at your school, at your business, at the nearest shopping mall. What are you going to do?

What are you waiting for? Contact us at <http://www.tacticalvictory.com> we will help you prepare.
