Are you preparing to send your people to one of the world's hotspots to provide frontline coverage? You may get more than a story if you're not careful. If you are headed overseas as an embed, we will get you ready with our experience with the local culture, coalition forces military culture and some practical measures to ensure your survival on the battlefield. Our philosophy is to teach you the skills you need to survive not to give you a "mini boot camp".

Here are some of the topics we will cover: What to expect when working with coalition forces, personal protective equipment, local national cultural awareness, operational security, dealing with combat stress, military jargon, unexploded ordinance, landmines, IED awareness, working with interpreters, introduction to terrorist operations, security assessments, route planning, hostage survival, land navigation, escape and evasion and emergency medicine.

If you are sending journalists or other non-Governmental employees to a "hotspot" and are concerned with their safety and want to protect them, we can help. Contact us at <http://www.tacticalvictory.com> to discuss your options.
